

Daisy Hope qualified from University College London (UCL) in 2014. She previously worked in the community clinic, mainstream schools and children's centre teams in Hackney, working with clients ranging from pre-school to primary age. Whilst studying at UCL, she developed an interest in disorders of fluency supporting the delivery of therapy for adults who stammer at City Lit. She joined the Michael Palin Centre in January 2016. She is trained in the delivery of a range of therapies for children and young people who stammer, including Palin Parent-Child Interaction Therapy, Family Communication Skills Therapy and The Lidcombe Programme.
