

Sarah Mullan qualified from Manchester Metropolitan University in 2004. She previously worked in the community clinic and mainstream school teams in Haringey, working with clients ranging from pre-school to secondary. While in Haringey, she developed an interest in disorders of fluency and in 2007 became joint clinical lead in stammering. She joined the Michael Palin Centre in 2012 and her current role at the Centre involves clinical work with children, young people and families and she is involved in the research taking place at the Centre.