

Victoria Crofts qualified as a speech and language therapist from University College London in 2009. She previously worked in South West Essex and Westminster with clients ranging from pre-school to secondary age in various settings including community clinics, mainstream schools and children's centres. Whilst in South West Essex, she developed an interest in disorders of fluency and continued to work with children who stammer in Westminster. She joined the Michael Palin Centre in 2013.